HOW DID THE FUND PERFORM AND WHAT AFFECTED ITS PERFORMANCE?

Over the past 6 months ending March 31, 2025, the FMI International Fund Institutional Class ("The Fund") fell by 3.68%, compared with the MSCI EAFE Index's gain of 2.25% in local currency and decline of 1.81% in U.S. Dollars. The Fund's passive currency hedge was a tailwind, helping performance during the period, albeit a negative contributor since the beginning of the year. After international stocks came under pressure in the fourth quarter of 2024, a U.S. fallout with Ukraine helped catalyze new defense spending and stimulus plans in Europe, sparking a rally in the first quarter of 2025. Value outperformed growth over the period but skewed more toward lower quality. Finance was the top performing sector over the semi-annual period, and the MSCI EAFE has a very large weighting in levered financials (majority in banks), at ~25% of the index. FMI is typically underweight financials (currently less than half the weight of the benchmark), and banks in particular, given their high leverage, opaque balance sheets, and low margins. Defense stocks have also been among the top-performing themes in Europe (up almost 70% in the first quarter after defense spending announcements). FMI's exposure to defense has been fairly limited, with concerns around business quality (reliance on government spending), growth prospects, and valuation. FMI's Producer Manufacturing and Commercial Services holdings gained in the period, despite both sectors declining in the broader benchmark.

In aggregate the Fund continues to trade at a sizeable discount to MSCI EAFE, while investing in quality businesses with solid balance sheets. FMI has successfully executed a disciplined value-oriented process for over 45 years, striving to generate strong absolute returns through a full cycle, with a key focus on downside protection. We believe increased market volatility can create opportunities.
